2 SKIS+2 SKIERS=1 CHAMP

CRIMEBUSTER looked up from his work and was startled to find himself face to face with Mark McLaren.

"What's the matter, Mark?" asked Crimebuster, noticing that Mark's deep brown eyes were bloodshot and there were dark circles underneath them.

"C.B.," Mark's voice quavered, "I can't go. I can't enter the National Slalom Race."

"But, Mark!" Crimebuster's startled voice answered. "The whole county raised money for your trip to the meet. They have faith in you and they want you to win."

"I can't go, C.B.," said Mark with finality.

"Well, Mark," added Crimebuster, "I know you have good reason. Let's not talk about it now. Why don't I come out to your place this evening. I won't mention it to anyone until we talk about it further. Have you said anything to anyone?"

"No," answered Mark flatly. "I haven't mentioned it. I just decided."

After Mark had left, Crimebuster turned to Looover and said, "Looover, there is something very funny about this. Mark has been building up to this event ever since he first put skis on. That kid skis like he was born with skis instead of feet. He's good and he's confident."

"Not only that," added Looover, "but everyone in the county is confident that he'll win the Nationals and be on his way to the Olympics."

"They are so confident that they were willing to raise the money to send him to Snow Valley. What a disappointment this will be!" said Crimebuster.

"If Mark won't go, I wonder what we can do. Don Hensen was a close runner-up at the county slalom race. He's a fast and good skier. I wonder what chance he'd stand," mused Looover.

"He's good all right, but he isn't the natural skier that Mark is. He seems to go at his skiing with a vengeance," concluded Crimebuster, "but let's do nothing and say nothing until I have a talk with Mark."

At that moment the phone rang. Looover answered and handed the receiver to Crimebuster, saying, "Speaking of Don Hensen, here he is."

"Hello, Don," said Crimebuster. "What? Where did you hear that? No, no one has made any further plans. Okay, Don, good-by."

"That's a very funny thing," said Crimebuster to Looover. "Don said he just heard that Mark wasn't entering the slalom race and wondered if any further entries were being considered."

"I thought Mark said he hadn't said anything to anyone," added Looover.

"You're right," mused Crimebuster. "And, it sounds a little phony to me."

That evening Squeeks and Crimebuster went to call on Mark McLaren. Mark greeted Crimebuster fondly at the door and invited him in. Mark's mother and father were out for the evening, and Crimebuster and Mark settled down in front of the fire. Squeeks, never having been in the house before, had to set out and explore the place from top to bottom.

Crimebuster, seeing how upset Mark was about the ski meet, hesitated about coming right to the point. They sat and chatted, Crimebuster trying to put Mark at ease.

Mark was a slight, small boy with honest brown eyes. He was a born skier as Crimebuster had remarked to Looover. In this section of the country most of the boys were brought up on skis because the winters were severe and skiing was the easiest way to get from place to place during the many snowy months. Mark had come to love it as a sport and he lived and breathed it. Each winter he could hardly wait till the first snow flake fell; all summer he spent waxing and fixing his skis in preparation for the first snow fall. Before he was knee high he'd entered the Junior races and had always done very well. However, last year in the county competition he came out on top in every event. Slalom was his specialty and he won that hands above every other contestant. Runner-up in all the races was always Don Hensen. Don was an excellent skier without question. However, he lacked the essential qualities of sportsmanship. Skiing to him was not a way of life as it was to Mark—it was a way of winning. Obviously, Mark and Don had never been very friendly.

Crimebuster and Mark chatted on and on. Mark did not mention the meet, and Crimebuster did not bring the subject up except in a general way.

"You know, Mark," Crimebuster mused, "the people of this county have a great deal of faith in you and in your ability. They are the ones who are sending you to the meet, and I hate to have you let them down."

"I know," said Mark, "but I just can't accept so much."

"It's not a matter of accepting so much," added Crimebuster. "You're giving a great deal in return."

At this point in the conversation Crimebuster heard Squeeks making a great commotion in the basement.

"What's eating that monkey?" he asked, as Squeeks came leaping into the room with a small piece of wood in his mouth.

"Squeeks, don't be so smart," reprimanded Crimebuster. "Just because you found a nice piece of kindling in the basement is no reason to get so excited."

No sooner had Crimebuster spoken than he caught Mark's expression and noticed that Mark was trying to take the wood from Squeeks without Crimebuster's noticing.

"Wait a minute," said Crimebuster. "Bring that here, Squeeks!"

Squeeks deposited a small polished piece of wood, jagged at the edges, in Crimebuster's lap. "Isn't this a piece of a ski?" asked Crimebuster.

"Yes," answered Mark, and paled.

"It's not broken, Mark, it's sawed in two!" concluded Crimebuster.

"Yes," answered Mark. "I knew you'd find out sooner or later. This morning I went down to wax my skis and put them in final good shape before I left for Snow Valley. I found the skis sawed in little pieces, like that one. My heart sank. I worked a year to buy those skis. I couldn't possibly afford to get another pair before the meet. So, the only thing for me to do was just back out of the running. Of course, I was disappointed. I've worked up to this all my life."

"Oh, Mark," consoled Crimebuster. "Don't worry. You'll leave for Snow Valley as scheduled. We can get a new pair of skis for you in no time at all."

"That's why I didn't say anything, C.B.," answered Mark. "Everyone has been wonderful to raise money to send me, and I can't expect them to furnish me with a pair of skis. I won't accept that."

"But Mark," added Crimebuster, "it's kind and it's charitable, yes, but the people have faith in you and actually, you are an excellent investment! If you win, even if you just place, you will put this county right on the map."

"Maybe you're right, C.B.," answered Mark, "but I won't accept a pair of skis unless I can pay them back for them."

"Well, we'll see," added Crimebuster. "And, Mark, you didn't mention this to anyone, did you?"

"No," answered Mark. "You and Looover are the only ones who know, that is except Squeeks."

The next morning was a busy one for Crimebuster. "You know, Looover," he said, "I think the best thing to do in this situation is to have a talk with Don Hensen."

"You're right, C.B.," agreed Looover. "For two reasons I think there's no question as to who is behind this whole situation. First, how did he know Mark wasn't going to enter the meet? Second, because he's the obvious runner-up in all events, it would be logical for him to be the representative instead of Mark."

Don Hensen came to see Crimebuster without hesitation, feeling, of course, that Crimebuster wanted to invite him to be the contestant from the county.

"Hello, Don," greeted Crimebuster. "Sit down. We have a lot to talk about."

Don's expression was a mixture of discomfort and apprehension as he sat in the chair offered to him.

"You've heard," continued Crimebuster, "that Mark is planning not to enter the National Slalom race?"

"Yes," answered Don, looking hopeful.

"Where did you hear it, Don?" queried Crimebuster.

"Oh, around," answered Don.

"That's funny," continued Crimebuster, "because no one knew about it but Looover and me. I can't understand how you got the word."

"I guess it leaked out somewhere," gulped Don.

"Now, I guess we should be looking for a new contestant," added Crimebuster.

"I guess you're right," said Don, again with hope in his eyes.

"And it's fairly obvious that you're the runner-up," continued Crimebuster.

"Really, C.B.? Do you mean that I will go?" answered Don.

"No!" said Crimebuster sternly. "I mean that you are obviously the only one who could have hacked up Mark's skis so he couldn't enter. You are the logical second, and it's a very familiar fact that you have always wanted to beat out Mark in the races."

"But, C.B. . . ." Don stammered.

"Never mind, Don," Crimebuster added. "It's obvious and I'm sorry for you—more than for Mark. Even if you had entered in Mark's place you would have felt so guilty, the glory of winning would have meant nothing to you."

"Oh, C.B.," wailed Don. "I admit doing it and I'm sorry already. I acted foolishly without thinking. The desire to win was just too strong."

"Okay, Don, no one knows anything about this except you and me. If you will see to it that Mark gets a new pair of skis (the best possible) before Saturday, the day he leaves for Snow Valley, this story will never get any further. And, I have confidence enough in you to know that nothing like this will ever happen again," concluded Crimebuster.

"C.B., you're a great guy! You're right, and I am sorry! I'll see to it that Mark has a pair of skis," Don answered.

Saturday came and the town was down at the train to bid Mark farewell and to wish him well. There was no doubt in anyone's mind that he'd come through the races with flying colors.

Aside to Crimebuster, Mark said, "But please, C.B., who is responsible for the new skis? I can't just take them without a word and without repayment."

"They're from a friend," answered Crimebuster, "who wishes to remain anonymous. The friend wants you to win and the friend, in giving you the skis to replace the others, gave you his wholehearted confidence and support."

As Mark stood on the platform he said a few encouraging words to his friends of the county who were sending him on the trip. He ended by saying, "And very special thanks to an anonymous friend whose gift and encouraging wishes will make me win, I'm sure."

Tannou Touva

IF YOU are a collector of odd shaped stamps such as diamonds and triangles, you most likely have some stamps of Tannou Touva in your collection, for during 1934-6, this country issued no less than 51 of these odd shaped stamps.

The name Tannou Touva is somewhat mysterious as well as quite difficult to locate on a map but, if you knew its more common name of Outer Mongolia, you would not have any trouble in finding it. Tannou Touva or Outer Mongolia lies between the southern border of Siberia, and northwest of Inner or Chinese Mongolia somewhere in the central portion of Asia.

Now that we have located Tannou Touva, let's find out about its inhabitants and what they do for a living. The country for the most part is a wilderness with a good portion of it unexplored. Large mountain ranges mostly covered by snow all year long, lock the entire country in on all four sides. The land within these mountains is a large plateau covered with lakes and rough country. The climate during the winter months is severe, averaging 12 degrees below zero and during the summer averages 66 degrees. In other words, the severe winters and its inaccessibility discourages people to settle in Tannou Touva. There are however hardy people living there but they are for the most part Mongolian tribes. These tribes live in tents or makeshift huts and earn their livelihood by raising sheep, ponies, and reindeer. They do not remain in one place long for whenever they need new grazing lands for their animals they just pack up and leave. In addition to Mongolian tribes, there are Turkic and Chinese and a mixture of all three.

In 1911, with the fall of the Chinese Empire, Outer Mongolia declared its independence. In 1924, a republic fashioned on the Soviet Russian style was put into effect. Since then there has been a steady influx of Russian inhabitants.

Stamps of Tannou Touva are manufactured in Russia and most of them are sold to stamp collectors, as few Mongolians can either read or write.

MEANING OF "APPROVALS"

When the word "approvals" or "approval applicants" appears in any advertisement on these pages, it means that the advertiser, in addition to sending you the offer he makes you, sends you some sheets of paper upon which are stuck stamps that he wishes you to look over and possibly buy. These stamps have written below them the price he wishes for that stamp. If you want to buy it, you remove the stamp or stamps you want, and RETURN those you do NOT want together with the money for THOSE YOU HAVE KEPT. In other words, the stamps are for your "APPROVAL."
